

Fresno Community Embraces New Name

While ABHOW's long-established Fresno continuing care retirement community is busy adding new amenities and stylish renovations to its campus, it is also embracing a brand-new name. San Joaquin Gardens is now known as The Terraces at San Joaquin Gardens.

"When a lot of people hear the name San Joaquin Gardens, they have a certain impression of the community, even though they might not have visited our campus in the last two to five years to see all the investments and enhancements we've completed," says Jessica Lopez, executive director. "We want to change these old impressions and give everybody a fresh perspective about what The Terraces at San Joaquin Gardens' lifestyle and campus is today."

The community has completed construction on 47 brand-new apartment homes, a pool, bistro, fitness center and spa; transformed five existing garden homes with renovations inside and out; and has plans to add new commons spaces and renovate an additional 20 garden homes by the end of this year. The community is also taking reservations on an additional 142 new apartments, Lopez says.

In addition to residential living, The Terraces at San Joaquin Gardens offers residents access to a full continuum of on-site assisted living, memory support and nursing care, one of the primary benefits of living at a CCRC. The community will soon break ground on The Grove, a dedicated memory support area, and begin construction on all-new assisted living and nursing care accommodations.

The Terraces at San Joaquin Gardens is committed to enriching the lives of older adults through progressive programming, services and activities. For more than 40 years, the community has delivered one of the most engaging lifestyles in the area — one that helps residents attain personal growth through learning and staying connected.

Even though the community's name has changed, the mission remains the same, Lopez says.

"We aren't leaving our heritage behind; we're building on it each day," she says. "We just felt it was time to give people a fresh introduction to the community."
